roll on, but there was no light. And that is where I realized that the words have the power to heal the soul. My mother said to me, this too shall pass. God has a greater plan for you. I don't know what it is, but he surely has. Applause And in all that distress and grief, somehow or the other, those words were so magical that they kept me going. I was trying to put that smile on my face all the time, it was so hard to hide the pain. And I was trying to put that smile on my face all the time, it was so hard to hide the pain. And I was trying to put that smile on my face all the time, it was so hard to hide the pain. And I was trying to put that smile on my face all the time, it was so hard to hide the pain. And I was trying to put that smile on my face all the time, it was so hard to hide the pain. which was there. But all I knew was that if I will give up, my mother and my brothers will give up too. I cannot see them crying with me. So what kept me going was one day I asked my brother I know I have a deformed hand, but I'm tired of looking at these white walls in the hospital and wearing these white scrubs. I'm getting tired of this. I want to add more colors to my life. I want to do something. Bring me some colors.
